1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown that the most reliable method is the one which involves the measurement of the change in concentration of one of the reactants or products.
 This method is applicable to all reactions, and is particularly useful in the case of reactions which are slow. The rate of reaction can be determined by measuring the change in concentration of one of the reactants or products at different times. The rate of reaction is then calculated from the slope of the curve obtained.

2. The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the factors which influence the rate of reaction. It is shown that the rate of reaction is influenced by the concentration of the reactants, the temperature, and the presence of a catalyst. The rate of reaction increases with increasing concentration of the reactants, with increasing temperature, and with the presence of a catalyst. The rate of reaction is also influenced by the surface area of the reactants. The rate of reaction increases with increasing surface area of the reactants.
